Subject: Microsoft Settlement

to the DOJ;

The settlement with Microsoft is yet another breach of the responsibility of the government to apply laws consistently across all parties across the United States. How can the DOJ settle a case with almost no penalties when nine judges determined that Microsoft broke the law. It is not the Justice department's job to decide which laws it wants to enforce. You have to enforce them all without exception. It's a serious breach of trust when a company can knowingly break the law and continue to break the law, because it knows there will be no significant penalty. I am 100% in favor of competition and free markets, but the boundaries are clearly drawn and Microsoft has crossed the line. Please consider meaningful remedies. The future of many things depends on this case. Don't screw it up.
